

Rescuing sailors from the stranded U. S. cruiser Milwaukee, which went aground off the coast of California in an attempt to float the submarine H-3, also aground. After this photograph was taken the surf became so high the rescuers had to use the breeches buoy. Photo by A. H. Robbins, Portland, Ore.

Dr. Cary T. Grayson, personal physician to President Wilson, photographed at the funeral of Admiral Dewey. His nomination to be rear admiral has provoked opposition in Congress.

The casket containing the body of the Admiral of the Navy being carried from his Washington home. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson may be dimly seen in the shadow of the doorway. Harris & Ewing, from Paul Thompson. Above, the death mask of the hero of Manila Bay, executed by U. S. J. Dunbar. Mr. Dunbar made death masks of President McKinley and other famous men. The one of the Admiral is for the Navy Department.

Ambassador Sato, of Japan, and Mrs. Sato were among the notables at the Dewey funeral. In common with members of many diplomatic families, they wore heavy mourning.

The official count of the vote in California, which re-elected President Wilson, was delivered to the United States Senate by Francis J. Heney. Vice-President Marshall received it and expressed his thanks.

The caisson bearing the flag-draped casket of Colonel Nathaniel Blunt Thurston, commander of the 74th New York Infantry, whose funeral took place last Sunday. The Colonel's favorite mount walked behind it, riderless, through the snow. International Film Service.